

Musicnotes.com Launches Microsoft Windows 10 Sheet Music Player App

Madison, Wis. 02/24/16 — The world's largest digital sheet music retailer and publisher, Musicnotes, is pleased to announce the launch of the company's new Digital Sheet Music Player app designed for the Microsoft Windows 10 platform, and optimized for desktops and tablets.

Musicnotes' new easy-to-use app features the Musicnotes Player, which gives app users the ability to listen to and watch sheet music notation and guitar tablature files, as well as instantly transpose music scores to alternative keys, among other functionalities. The new Windows 10 Sheet Music Player app offers the following features:

- Import the customer's entire Musicnotes sheet music and guitar tab library
- Play over 300,000 sheet music arrangements
- Select which instruments or parts are included in playback
- Adjust playback tempo
- Transpose song key in-app
- Print sheet music from the app
- Receive seven free bonus songs (with new free sheet music added monthly at the Musicnotes store)

Musicnotes launched the app to provide additional convenience and support for their ever-growing customer base utilizing Microsoft Windows 10. "We know what musicians are looking for in 2016 because we are musicians, first and foremost," said Jon Higgins, Musicnotes' director of technology. "The ability to listen to a digital score or transpose music to another key on the spot—just two of many awesome features available on the app—saves musicians time and allows them to devote more effort toward creative expression. With the migration of many of our customers to the Windows 10 platform, we felt it was important to offer an app designed and built specifically for Windows 10 for an exceptional technology experience."
